LIST OF MEMBERS

OF

THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

FOR THE YEAR 1909

Princeton University Press Princeton, A. J. 1910

THE CENTURY was founded, and its first Constitution adopted, January 13th, 1847, One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association, of which number 42 accepted the invitation and became Founders. Forty-six others joined during the year.

While the first Constitution did not mention any limit to membership, the intention of the Founders was to set the limit at one hundred members, which made them give the new Association its name, The Century.

On March 7th, 1857, it was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended March 29th, 1883.

The following table shows the limit to membership as decided by successive constitutional amendments:

Date of Amendment	Limit
March 5, 1853	200 Members.
March 7, 1857	250 "
May 7, 1859	350 "
February 1, 1862	400 "

Fobruary 6 1900	1000 Resident Members.
February 6, 1892	300 Non-Resident Members.
From the Spring of 1847 to the Spri	ing of 1849 it occupied rooms
at No. 945 Broadway.	-
From the Spring of 1849 to the Spri	ing of 1850 it occupied rooms at No. 435 Broome Street.

From the Spring of 1850 to May, 1852, it occupied rooms at No.

575 Broadway.

D. J. L. C. Year

From May, 1852, to the Spring of 1857 it occupied the house at

No. 24 Clinton Place.

From the Spring of 1857 to January 5th, 1891, it occupied the house No. 109 (old No. 42) East Fifteenth Street.

On January 10th, 1891, it removed to its present Club House, No.

7 West Forty-third Street.

On May 4th, 1901, John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, only surviving members of The Column, a literary society founded in 1825, presented to The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The silver memorial column bears a lamp which since 1858 had burned at every meeting of The Column, and is now lighted at each gathering of The Century.

BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

The Board of Managers of The Century Association submits the following report for the year 1909:

The membership a year ago was 1267. It is now 1261, classified as follows:

Honorary Members	2
Resident Members, paying dues	969
Non-resident Members, paying dues	245
Absent Members, exempt from paying dues	45
	1261

Forty-seven new members have been added to our roll, thirty-eight resident, and nine non-resident. Three memmembers have been transferred to the resident class, and eight to the non-resident class. Five members have resigned and forty-eight members have died. There are now thirty-two vacancies in the resident list and fifty-three in the non-resident list.

The Committee on Art reports the following additions to the Club's Collections:

- I. A bronze relief portrait of our President, the Hon. John Bigelow, by D. A. Tod. Presented by Mr. J. Kennedy Tod.
- 2. Copy of the Official Medal of the Hudson-Fulton Celebration Committee. Bronze medal by E. Fuchs, 4 inches in diameter, mounted on a base of polished wood. Presented by Mr. Henry W. Cannon.
- 3. One of the five gold medals presented by The Century Club in 1864 to the five soldiers who rescued the body of Colonel Peter A. Porter from under the guns of the enemy, at Cold Harbor, Virginia, June 3d, 1864.
- 4. Large framed group photograph of the Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Sanitary Fair in New York, April, 1864. Presented by Mr. Brander Matthews.

In the Club Gallery were held the usual monthly exhibitions of works by the Artist members, and also the following special exhibitions:

January: Landscapes by Clark G. Voorhees.

The Indians of the Painted Desert, photographs
by Frederick J. Monsen.

February: Paintings and Drawings by Kenneth Frazier, Birge Harrison, William H. Hyde, and Allen Tucker.

March: Chinese Paintings from the Collection of Professor Isaac Taylor Headlands.

March: Architects' notes and sketches of decorative and picturesque subjects in pen, pencil, water color and oil, by thirteen Architects.

April: Paintings and sketches by John B. Bristol.

November: 200 sketches from Mexico and California by Lockwood de Forest.

December: Recent Studies from nature by J. C. Nicoll.

The Committee on Literature reports that 214 volumes have been added to the library, of which 120 volumes were purchased, while 94 volumes were presented, mostly by their authors. The new books are classified as follows:

Fine Arts of Design	39 volumes	•
Music	23 "
History, Biography and Travel	82 "
Belles Lettres	41 "
Science, Theology, etc	29 "
-

The committee has made an especial effort to strengthen the Club's collection of books relating to the fine arts of design, and has been so fortunate as to obtain a large number of valuable works in these departments at little more than a nominal cost. It would instance, specifically, the works relating to miniature painting.

It also states with pleasure that it has filled a notable gap in the Library by the purchase of 23 volumes of standard works relating to music which cover that subject sufficiently for our present needs.

The Committee hereby thanks the following donors for books presented by them to the Library:

Continuing his delightful policy of last year, the President secured the services of our fellow member, Professor H. F. Osborn, for an account of the Darwin Centennial at a monthly meeting.

Under the auspices of the Committees on Art and Literature, lectures were given as follows:

Chinese Painters, by Prof. I. T. Headland.

Our Four Big Bridges, by Mr. Montgomery Schuyler.

The Indians of the Painted Desert, by Mr. Frederick J. Monsen.

The Personal Washington, by Mr. W. W. Ellsworth.

Education at the time of Shakespeare, by Mr. George A. Plimpton.

A Visit to Mount Kilauea, by Mr. Wm. Alanson Bryan.

Polar Astronomy, by Prof. Harold Jacoby.

The Fiji Islanders, and A Naturalist in the Straits of Magellan, by Mr. Chas. H. Townsend.

The House Committee reports a small increase in attendance, with an increase of over eight per cent. in the receipts of the restaurant and a small increase at the cigar stand, while the receipts of the bar and billiard room are a trifle smaller than last year.

The following members have died during the year:

GABRIEL GRANT		_

Daniel Rogers Noves had been a member of our Association for nine years when he died at the age of seventytwo. He was born in Connecticut and trained to business on the basis of a sound general education. Early in his career he identified himself with the throbbing life of the northwest and during nearly half a century was a foremost citizen of St. Paul. A staunch Presbyterian, he won the affections of men in every church and a moving tribute was paid to him by Archbishop Ireland. His activities as a public man embraced ecclesiastical, charitable and educational work of every kind. In all these he displayed the qualities of devoted helpfulness, of strength and unswerving principle, of gentle breeding and business probity which create enduring trust and love in a great community. His bounty was munificent in money and in sympathy: he lives in his works and friendships.

Theodore Kane Gibbs was a member here for a quarter of a century. He was born in Rhode Island sixty-six years ago, the son of a governor of his state; and of late years he had been a foremost citizen of Newport. He served throughout the Civil War as soldier and officer, being twice promoted for gallantry in battle. But the most of his riper years were spent in New York, where his home was a social centre and his life rich in commercial and public activities. Such eminence as he had was unsought, but he shrank from no duty thrust upon him, and they were many. He was eminently a man of the Centurion type, modest, genial, comprehensive in his interests, and pleasant in his ways.

THOMAS LOWRY was a native of Illinois, educated at the common school and the college known as Lombard University in Galesburg. He began life as a lawyer, but soon developed into a far-sighted financier. The enterprises he undertook were successful and much of his time was spent at the seats of the great banking interests. He became a member here when fifty-eight and was for eight years an occasional visitor in his leisure hours. In the city of Minneapolis, where he lived, his business activities were so extended and creative that his public life became noteworthy and he was a force of the first importance behind the Munificent in his benevolence, machinery of state. courageous as a city-builder, astute and witty in his intercourse with men, no man was better known or more highly esteemed among those who do the great work of the world.

Though often named for conspicuous office, he never accepted one, content to be a great American citizen.

Russell Sturgis was a child of Maryland, but early became a New Yorker, graduating from the City College, laying here, in the office of the elder Eidlitz, the foundations of his professional study as an architect. After a period of travel, and of study in Munich, he returned to become eminent in the Gothic revival, an apostle of art according to Ruskin, and a voluminous author. Though the architect of three important structures at Yale and of a considerable number here, though associated with famous contemporaries as a practising architect, and though a trainer of the younger generation both in a professional chair and as private preceptor, yet he is best known for his cultivated taste and acute criticism as a writer. Among hundreds of fugitive pieces, his work on "The Nation" and his great Dictionary of Architecture stand out as monumental. He was thirtynine years a member here and seventy-three at death. The Century was the home of his soul, his intimacies were here; the good cheer and helpful converse with kindred spirits in these rooms were his very life. He was one of the builders in the Institute of Architects and in the Civil Service Reform Association. Not only was he a metropolitan personage, but a national; for his advice was sought from far and near. His personality was keen but engaging, his knowledge of men and subjects penetrating, his companionship stimulating and agreeable. It is of such fibre that the fabric of The Century is woven.

EDWARD MITCHELL was born in this city, the son of a distinguished judge, was educated in our schools and at Columbia in both the college and law school. He was in the sanitary service during the Civil War, began with the practice of his profession in 1865 and speedily rose to eminence in both public life and at the bar. Twice he lead the forlorn hopes of his party, was for a term assemblyman, was district attorney of the United States for five years and for a term commissioner of parks. But his most important service to the community was as a trustee of his university for nearly thirty years. To the high duties of that place he gave his great ability, an untiring, unremitting, faithful, conscientious service. His reading and study in connection with the financial and academic sides of education were extensive and fertile, his counsel was weighty and influential. thirty-seven years he had been of our number, when taken from us in his sixtieth year. His quality was fine and his companionship delightful. He found congenial friends here and his high breeding, cheerful presence and strong character are sorely missed.

WILLIAM TILLINGHAST BULL had reached his sixty-first year of life and almost his thirtieth of membership here, when his short but gallant fight with disease and death was ended. He was a native of Rhode Island, a graduate of Harvard and of Columbia, studying in Europe for two years after graduation as a physician. During his career as a practitioner he was connected successively with a series of our most important hospitals: Bellevue, New York, St. Luke's, that for Ruptured and Crippled, and the State Emigrants. He was long the professor of surgery in Columbia. In all these relations his was such success as is vouchsafed only to the elect. He invented new operations, and practiced the old magisterially; he was famous in cancer cases as well as in operating for appendicitis; he had a specialty in hernia which was almost unique. Tender and sympathetic in all relations, he was supremely so with the lowly; as a brilliant contributor to the literature of his profession he rendered full account of his great powers: such was his moderation that though the numbers of his operations were unsurpassed, he never attained to opulence. His social gifts were choice and delightful. They endeared him to the best and he was a member of four clubs other than this.

EDMUND LOUIS GRAY ZALINSKI was a Pole by birth, but came to America in early childhood and was educated at Seneca Falls and Syracuse up to the age of fifteen, when he entered the army, served to the close of the Civil War, and then, as an officer in the regular army, adopted the profession he had learned so thoroughly in the field as his life work. He was first a lieutenant in the Fifth Artillery, then instructor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and afterwards in succession a graduate of our higher artillery school and of the school of submarine mining; he retired as captain in 1894 and was brevetted major in 1904. He will be remembered long for his inventions, which were, in the main, weapons and means of defense; but, being novel and almost revolutionary in warfare, they aroused great interest. He was a man much beloved for his sweetness of character: having many friends and catholic interests; he belonged to many clubs. But it was with us that he spent most of his leisure, here that he found his home. As his life waned and he was sorely tried with sorrow and pain, his gentle heroism and undaunted courage were remarkable. He had been nineteen years a member when he died at sixty.

Alfred Cornelius Howland was a man of the best and oldest New England stock and of a rare personal charm, now almost antiquated. He had boundless ambition, but it was exhibited in the meticulous performance of simple duties, in the genius for kindly service, in a passion for good-fellowship. Born at Walpole, New Hampshire, seventy-one years ago, he had his education from 1860 onward in Düsseldorf and Paris, finding the companionship of his soul among plain folk and the expression of his ideals in the work of the Barbizon artists. It was the worth and the charm of daily life in quiet scenes that furnished the coy beauty which he ever sought to express in his painting. So, ofttimes, he caught and portrayed nature when off her guard, and fixed on the canvas with loving care her most precious, because her most unconscious moods. He was for many years at home amid the scenes of his birth, then for a long time in this metropolis and at the close of life in California. He was a member here for 43 years, often seen in these rooms, and is sadly missed by the friends who recall him with tender affection.

JAMES HULME CANFIELD had been nine years an associate when he died at sixty-two. He was an Ohioan who came in childhood to Brooklyn. There he was fitted for Williams, from which college he graduated. Finding employment in Iowa, he chose the West as his field, was admitted to the bar and settled in Michigan. By instinct a scholar and an administrator, he was soon called as professor to the University of Kansas, where public life, education, and political economy were his first concerns. A free trader by conversion and conviction his professional life in a state university was difficult. Successively he was chancellor of the University of Nebraska, president of the Ohio State University and since 1899 Librarian at Columbia and lecturer on history at West Point. Men of his type are soldiers of civic righteousness; he was found struggling constantly somewhere and somehow over every question which affects civil and political life. Education was of course his forte and his foible; essentially an orator, the spoken word concerned him above all else, so that his writings were largely occasional and fugitive. But he wrote two fine volumes in his field. He was a familiar figure in the groups of Century men, respected and beloved.

Robert Percy Alden was sixty-one years old and had been an associate for twenty-seven years. The illustrious name he inherited by direct descent from his Mayflower ancestor he bore without reproach, indeed with distinction. His sire was an army officer of culture and the son was a graduate of Yale and Columbia. His life was of the quiet, unobtrusive sort, but he had in a high degree the qualities of the amateur and connoisseur. His friendships were close-knit but he was companionable with all.

George Rice Carpenter was only forty-six when he ceased from his exhausting activities. For eleven years he had come and gone among us, genial, smiling, inspiring. He was the son of a missionary and born in Labrador, was a graduate of Harvard, studied in Berlin and Paris, returned to be instructor in Harvard, professor of English in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and later in Columbia. He was a writer of eminence as well as a teacher of renown, and three volumes of permanent value bear his name. His personal charm was great and he enjoyed the devoted friendship of many elect men. Only his colleagues can know, however, the scope of his devoted life, the warfare he waged for the manner and the matter of both education and learning, the passion for progress which consumed him, the unselfishness and courage with which he flung himself into the fray when the fight was hottest. His short life was intense in the service of his profession, he died on the field of battle.

WILLIAM FITZHUGH WHITEHOUSE was aged sixty-seven and had borne our name for twenty-two years. He was the son of a famous bishop, and was educated at Columbia both liberally and professionally. Though a member of the bar he was essentially a man of affairs and by avocation a connoisseur of the fine arts, to the cultivation and study of which he gave abundant time and thought. To enjoy the society of creative and poetic minds he bent every energy and was the friend of many distinguished contemporaries. In church, in finance and in society he was a power; attentive, suggestive, and energetic in important works. affliction of partial blindness he bore without murmur, and the vision of his mind entirely replaced the defects in physical sight. Cosmopolitan in taste, he was at home on both sides of the sea, but at Newport in summer and in his New York clubs he found the companionship he most highly valued.

Francis Marion Crawford was a citizen of two worlds. Of famous American stock he was born in Italy; educated in this country, in England, in Germany and at Rome; began his work of writing as the editor of a newspaper published in India where he had gone to study Sanskrit, and continued it as critic and contributor in two New York publications.

He was proficient in twelve languages at twenty-eight and bade fair to become a scholar in comparative philology, when a weird tale of Indian things, partly true, was put in writing and instantly made him famous as a story teller. The gift was too precious and thenceforward for twentyseven years he devoted life to the telling of tales and the writing of historical studies; forty titles stand to his credit in published works. Though his home was in Italy he was much in America and he had been one of us for nine years, a privilege he highly prized. In person he was most distinguished; tall, athletic, well appointed: in mind he was versatile, comprehensive and sympathetic: in daily life a companionable, charming fellow. In one respect he was a type, for he had that curious gift attributed to us by many foreigners of knowing them better than we know ourselves. His American tales cannot compare for insight with those in which he depicts the Anglo-Indian and the Italian. Moreover he is remarkable in his entire absence of artistic pose. He had no illusions as to his own gift, underrating it, if anything, and he was glad to be voluminous, immensely voluminous; for he seems to have grasped the secret that only in continuous, arduous, wearing toil does the occasional thought, the passage of permanent value now and then occur. The greatest writers have written thousands of pages that a hundred might endure. Hence Crawford made a business of his profession. Indifferent to scoff or scorn, he could pen six thousand words in a single day and often did so. And besides he found time for a rich, full life; a life of travel, of domestic felicity, of intimate friendships. When he passed away the Italians mourned him sincerely and the English-speaking world felt that another source of joy and cheerfulness and helpful pastime had been removed from two hemispheres.

HAMMOND LAMONT had been barely three years a member of The Century when at the age of forty-six he was cut down unexpectedly and untimely by disease that had scarcely more than announced itself. Born in a near county of the state, he had the earliest education of a cultivated clergyman's family life, graduated with the highest distinction from Harvard and with renown as a college journalist. Steeped in English literature and thoroughly trained to use his mother tongue subtly and effectively, he continued his college activities in a wider sphere. From his desk as a journalist in Seattle, he was called as instructor to Harvard, and thence to Brown, where he remained until he became here the managing editor of a foremost evening paper. Loyal to the truth, he was loyal to true men and was beloved by them; in educational matters his words were weighty and commanded attention; for the right as the righteous see it he battled without reserve. Called to various honorable professorships, he preferred his first and latest career. In these rooms he was gay, witty, congenial, at home among his kind.

WILLIAM CURTIS GULLIVER was a native of Connecticut with a parentage which traced from the earliest Puritan stock. He was a graduate of Andover School and of Yale, was trained to the law in our New York school and was the member for many years of an important firm. He was concerned in many pivotal cases, and was well known as a careful, intelligent, perspicacious adviser. Much loved by those whose tastes were for field sports, as were his own, he was a member and frequenter of the most famous clubs of the metropolis. In matters connected with the improvement of horses, their training and breeding, he possessed and exercised the highest authority. His acquaintance was large, his friendships carefully chosen. The arduous vocation to which he devoted his highest powers was complemented by the avocation of riding or driving; his discernment in matters of art and literature he cultivated by the best reading. He lived sixty-two years and for seventeen he was an associate of ours.

John Crosby Brown was in his seventy-second year at death and in the thirty-second of his membership here. A New Yorker by birth, he graduated at Columbia and was trained as a banker on both sides of the sea. He was not only the directing partner of the great banking house which bears his family name, he was a leading spirit in nine other financial corporations of great importance, a trustee of the Metropolitan Museum, of Union Seminary and of Columbia University. This enumeration might arouse incredulity as to the extent of finite powers, but in each and all of his spheres he exercised a powerful, and in some a dominating influence. This was due in measure to natural gifts, but it was mainly due to a disciplined soul which enabled him to turn swiftly from task to task, to use the measure of his time advantageously, and throughout a long life to find recreation and refreshment in a home where the highest standards were cultivated.

This great merchant was great likewise in the views he entertained of responsibilities. Within two years four men of similar mark have been taken from our ranks—all friends or dear acquaintances, all majestic figures in the life of the Metropolis, all successful in their enterprises, all princely in their munificence, and all devoted to the service of the community. In this constellation Mr. Brown shone second to none. He was faithful in little and faithful in much; in church, in state and in family he was true to his inheritance of liberty, religious and political, to the sanctity of the institutions central to our very existence. The son of a philanthropist, he too was a lover of his kind; devoted to the church of his fathers, the fear of God was the essence of his being; and it took the form of wisdom in education, in beauty, in the fine arts and in the finest of all arts, that of pure and noble living. It was in the exhibition of such qualities that he became a very foremost citizen of New York, known of all men and heeded in our chiefest concerns, a force behind every uplifting influence. To Union Seminary, whose interests were an heirloom, he devoted his very highest powers as head of its trustees and was ever indefatigable in the study of its interests. The noble pile of buildings on our educational acropolis devoted to its uses, were his joy and pride; his last public appearance was in laying their corner stone.

The friendships of this association he prized as his was prized by us. Nowhere were his high breeding, his gentle nature, his kindly spirit, his wide experience and knowledge more free in their play than in these places. While they may know him no more, his memory will long remain green where he was best known and most appreciated.

Rutherfurd, a famous astronomer, and was educated at Columbia. In some form he was related to almost every family of colonial renown in this part of the country. He inherited wealth and spent his life as a country gentleman and as a connoisseur, of late years for the most part in Europe. He was nearly seventy when stricken, and had been on our rolls for forty-five years. He was the possessor of many splendid Italian paintings, and his collection of armor is noteworthy. He was a director of the Metropolitan Museum, a member of eight social and five learned associations. His activities were those of a fine nature and his personality won many warm friends. His acquaintance was of the choicest and he himself was welcome where the interests of art and letters are the chief concern.

FORDHAM MORRIS was of our oldest and most excellent stock, sixty-seven years of age, and for eleven years a member of The Century. He was graduated from Trinity College and Columbia. But he was a soldier of the Civil War rather than a student of the University, and it was only at the close of that struggle that he studied law; becoming a member of the bar, he was for many years in active practice.

His splendid character won the confidence of the circles in which he lived; his qualities of heart endeared him to those who enjoyed his friendship. For public service his readiness and capacity were shown in important trusts, notably in the service of the City College. For many years past he was constantly in these rooms, reading and conversing, one of the general group which is ever ready to furnish stimulating talk and a hearty welcome in the Graham library, a member of The Century's senate chamber. The loss of such as he is deeply felt by those to whom this is a second home.

Leffert Lefferts Buck was taken at seventy-two, having been among us for fifteen years. He, too, was of ancient New York lineage and nobly served the community of his birth, both in military and civil life. He began his liberal studies at the Canton Academy, but the Civil War broke out and he hurried to the front, fought in ten important battles, was wounded at Antietam and mustered out in 1865, having been promoted to be captain for gallantry at Lookout Mountain. On recovery he entered the Troy Polytechnic and was graduated as civil engineer. It was not long before he became distinguished as a bridge builder and his name is associated with others in connection with the great steel arches of North and South America, east and west. He has been styled the father of the Manhattan Bridge, greatest, perhaps, of them all. Eight associations of this city, learned and social, claimed him as a member; for with strength of mind, profound learning and force of character, he combined a gentle breeding and sunny disposition which endeared him to the best.

WILLIAM REED HUNTINGTON had been of our number for twenty-three years when taken to his reward at seventy-one years of age. He was really one of us, in heart and soul, for his life was such that every Centurion recognizes in it the fulfilment of at least some of his own ideals. completeness and symmetry of parts is rare indeed. was a Christian minister at every moment, but he was likewise an able administrator of an institutional church with vast pecuniary resources. He had a passion for the higher life of the soul here and hereafter, yet he knew the fine arts as a connoisseur, and belles lettres as both amateur and contributor, his poetic power being evinced alike in prose and verse; he showed the due diligence and loving devotion of a father in his domestic life, yet in public life he seemed to give the whole of himself, his wisdom, his dignity, his temperance, his firmness. The authority of his high calling he felt and exhibited in every relation; and his courage, physical, mental and moral, was an inspiration.

He was born in Massachusetts, graduated from Harvard, studied divinity, served in Boston for two years, in Worcester for twenty-one, and at Grace Church for twenty-five, a career of single-minded devotion lasting not far from half a century. He might have been a bishop, but his gifts were for the fighting line rather than the headquarters. He was heart and soul of his own church, but he had a catholic spirit and comprehensive appreciation. The Hebrews of New York knew and admired the boldness with which he attacked wrong, even in Russia, and joined in a tribute to his memory. Yet week after week and year after year he delivered his simple message, confident of the Kingdom without accessories, pomps, or accommodations; and congregations of the critical sort thronged his pews to hear him. He knew no sliding scale of faith or morals: things were right or wrong. The world was growing better, the march of life was joyous and upward; he spoke his message, headed his company, comforted the weak and rebuked the froward. His race was that of the prophets.

He had honors from four great Universities, yet he showed no superciliousness; he was backed by an enthusiastic, powerful church, yet he was as meek as the weakest; when money was showered on him he gave it for pensions to his worn fellow workers.

In city life and work the activities of his corporation were the dismay of radical agitators, for here was a church open and free except for a few hours, daily at that; here were services for the immigrant, in foreign tongues where necessary, instruction for the young, education for those engaged in the services, home and foreign mission work, the care of infants, nurses' settlements, neighborhood visitation, the ministration to prisoners, industrial training and employment offices, friendly societies, reading rooms, libraries, even social entertainments. All this was not bestowed as a boon on the recipients but as their Christian right; no one in his parish knew the humiliation of charity. Such is the power of organization and sympathy. But Dr. Huntington had insight to realize the need for church unity in the struggle for mastery over radicalism, over indifference, over active malevolence. If Samuel did not hew Agag in pieces, Agag would hew Samuel. Hence his zeal for Church unity, his long persuasive campaign for the union of Christendom, a field where his qualities shone brightest.

Among his fellow Centurions Dr. Huntington was a personage, a stimulating talker, an appreciative listener, a helpful adviser; one of the friends whose friendship is like brotherly love.

Cornelius Cuyler Cuyler was but fifty when removed from us by untimely and accidental death, sixteen years after election to our society. He was by birth a Philadelphian of high descent and a graduate of Princeton. Through his mother's line he was, however, much interested in New York, and early became a resident of the city. Immediately after graduation he entered on the career of a banker and was among the strongest of our financial men at a comparatively early age. On the great social and economic questions of the time he spent much study, and was in his leisure hours an admirer and lover of the great things in art and literature. But his avocation was education. Warmly interested in athletics, he braved all opposition in the time and devotion he gave to its interests, realizing both its disciplinary value and its unrivalled power to unify the intercollegiate interests of his country. Temperate and firm, even to sternness, in the regulation of its abuses, he was unvielding in its support. To the intellectual and spiritual interests of the universities, his own in particular, he gave unweariedly of energy and money, serving Princeton as trustee with a passionate devotion, and securing for the great educational institutions of the city invaluable support. He was president of the Institute of Musical Art and treasurer of the American School in Rome. Seven clubs and six great educational enterprises of the city claimed him as coadjutor. His highest gifts were his probity, his wisdom, his profound knowledge of men and their motives. When he left us there was less sunshine in the world for his numerous acquaintances in all spheres. He had seemed destined to replace in full measure some of the great predecessors of the earlier generation but, even as it is, the community is richer for his life.

James Bruyn Andrews was a Centurion of long standing, having been elected forty-seven years ago. He was an amateur and critic of quality, and in the study of folk-lore stood high as an authority. He was a New Yorker and a practising lawyer of high standing, a graduate of Yale. His life was spent in large measure over the sea, partly in the consular service, but latterly and for a long time in the care of feeble health. Though his work as a scholar was frequently interrupted, it had sterling merit and he received recognition from the French Academy for his masterly researches. His work was its own sufficient reward and in its enjoyment, without haste but almost without rest, he lived to the end.

JOHN BUNYAN BRISTOL, eighty-three years old and thirtysix years a member here, was a patriarch among the painters of America. Born at Hillsdale in this state, he learned his art without the aid of teachers and in the face of every discouragement; his early years were influenced, of course, by impressions, especially those of the great Hudson River painters and to their traditions he remained loyal. For his facility and devotion, for his sweet and quiet interpretation of nature's moods, for the firmness of his drawing and construction, he was made an Academician when forty-nine, and further honors crowned him a few years later. Ever working, ever aspiring, always inquiring, he became very intimate with his art and with the natural world. The exhibition of his work held in our rooms but a few months since displayed a freshness and vigour that showed how near such labour comes to discovering the fountain of youth.

EDWARD WILLIAMS DODD was a Bostonian by birth but a New Yorker by adoption, a merchant, a literary amateur and a scholar. With him virtually disappears the line of John Hancock, for his two sisters have never married, and he was childless. Throughout his business life he enjoyed the society of writers, and a literary woman of distinction became his wife. Their home was a congenial meeting place for the creative spirits of our city in art and letters. He was for twenty-one years a sharer of our joys, and was sixty when long failing health ended in death. For several years he had had his home in France, but on his frequent returns he found here old acquaintance, warm greeting and pleasant association. His presence was magnetic, his sympathies wide and his companionship delightful.

Charles Follen McKim was a Pennsylvanian, the child of heroes, for his father was a Presbyterian clergyman who had assisted in founding the Anti-Slavery society and who, daring a savage public opinion, fetched the body of John Brown from the gallows for decent burial; his wife, a strong and gentle Quakeress, accompanying him. Of vigorous intellect, the son took a sound preliminary education of general culture and was then for some months a student in the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard. But, though seeking, he had not found and soon he sailed away to become a student at the Beaux Arts where he did find congenial work and where, exerting the most strenuous diligence, he completed three years of fruitful, exhaustive study. Thus disciplined, he traveled on the continent for two years, gaining knowledge and experience. With this his fine apprenticeship was complete. He was now-twenty-five years old and, again, after testing and seeking, he made New York his home, finding first one partner in William R. Mead, and then later a second in Stanford White. What this triad of men was, is written large in the history of American architecture. Such interpenetration of spirit, genius, learning, achievement and interest is a unique example; the completeness of their collaboration stands alone, for to this hour only the initiated even think they know the various sources of inspiration of all the firm's splendid and varied works. Their tri-une resultant genius has, with the general assent, received the name of McKim and it is no disparagement to the other two if the lay writer should make errors in the distribution of praise. All three Centurions, McKim, sixty-two when he found rest, had been an inspiring comrade here for twenty-seven years. The Century therefore is a partner in their renown, as its rooms have been the scene of their relaxations, their pleasures, their sport and their conversation. McKim was a President of the American Institute of Architects, a body of commanding quality and power, and was the founder of the American Academy at Rome, where acolytes of his profession enlarge their horizon. He received the great medal at Paris in 1900, and, for the promotion of architecture had bestowed on him by King Edward in 1903 the royal medal of the British architects. Thus, without vainglory, and in the humble spirit of the seeker, he found more of earthly reward than is given to most.

For, of him, Lessing's precept was literally true, he was sure that the seeking was nobler than the finding. The calm, proportioned, broad, majestic style associated with his name was discovered and evolved only after long search, dating really from the erection of the Villard houses, which were only in measure the design of the firm. But when found, it was the language of Olympians; to the end it has been growing in all its essential qualities under their hands and in the expression of his genius. Further, it was likewise discovered to be the garment of a nation's soul in architecture and over our mighty realms its subtle influences have stolen until they are manifest on every hand.

There is much prating in this world about originality or the absence of it. No sooner is something finished in art or letters than questionings and shrugs make clear how the wiseacres are on the scent of its origin, be it book, building, or composition in music, painting or sculpture. In other arts it may be possible to cut loose from the past, but in architecture the past of necessity binds us, given the material and problem as, with slight variation, always the same: to wit, the substance of mother earth and the housing fitly of men in some form of activity; or of their dead; or of their spiritual aspirations. Lines are either straight or curved, structure may be either concealed or displayed, there may be much or little ornament. Hence McKim's creative power stood four square on the past, his originality was in the use of his own wherever he found it and those who do not discern the fact, fail to understand that art is one and the same wherever practised; the greatest artist can only impress his own soul on some manner of it and on a small portion of its matter.

James David Smillie was seventy-seven years old and had been one of our community for thirty-two years. He was a son of New York, educated at the New York University and at the National Academy of Design; here was his home and here his fame was earned. He was a founder of three art societies in this city and in London. He was not merely an able painter, but, trained as a commercial engraver, he was also devoted to artistic engraving and etching. His real studio was the open air amid the giant mountain ranges of America: the Appalachians, the Rockies and the Sierras. His strong permanent work had such scenes as he there found for its subjects, and these he treated with breadth, sympathy and firmness. In his will he provided for a jury to destroy such works as were left in his studio that were not up to the standard of his renown: a novel proviso and an interesting contribution to a weighty subject. He was welcome here for the finest qualities of artist and man, for the originality and suggestiveness of his talk.

ARTHUR LAWRENCE was born near Boston sixty-seven years ago and had been in this society for nine years. He was of fine origin, graduated at Harvard and passed some time at the front in the Civil War. In theology he was trained at Gambier, Ohio, and at Cambridge, Massachusetts. By nature a scholar, and a minister of the gospel by strong conviction and choice, his parish work was for a short time in this city and for a long time, over thirty years, in Stockbridge. He was a supporter of four learned societies and delivered lecture courses in various divinity schools. Gentle in blood and training, of pleasant manners and personality, an ardent, faithful minister, he was an example in his life, and welcome everywhere in the best company.

ROBERT HOE had lived for seventy years in this, the city of his birth and education. For thirty-three of these he was a member of this association. Third of his name, he inherited a supreme power in the mechanical processes of printing. During his reign in the kingdom of the printing press, the miraculous improvement already made by his forebears was eclipsed, because in the capacity to wield the new forces, in the invention and adaptation of new forms, and in procedure, he stood alone among men so far engaged in his art. His works and factories were models of organization, and from boyhood onward his employees were educated, protected, encouraged and disciplined. Accessory to his prime concern were the studies of all its ancillary arts, and within that field he was an author of distinction. Likewise in the evolution of his talent he began the collection of books, and this developed into a passion. The judgment, the suspicion, the daring and the caution, the seeking and selection of the connoisseur, all these powers he had or had acquired. Thus his private library for extent and quality is nowhere surpassed, if indeed it be equalled. It is his renown to have been first as printer, first as collector of the printer's trophies.

Charles Henry Farnam was of a noted Connecticut family, a graduate of Yale and of Columbia. His tastes, however, were not legal. For a time he followed mercantile pursuits in New York, for a time he led the scholar's life in the Peabody Museum at Yale, and yet another portion of his life he spent as an author. That his pursuits were apparently desultory was due to uncertain health, and for long its condition compelled residence for part of the year in Colorado. He was sixty-three when the struggle ended and had been for ten years a Centurion. The qualities of his mind and heart, his gentleness, unselfishness and sympathetic sociability made him, of right, welcome to all the circles of this association.

EDMOND KELLY was a dweller in two lands; born in France and liberally educated first at Columbia and then at English Cambridge, he returned to Columbia for legal study, practised at our bar while professing the science of politics in his Alma Mater, then in Paris and again in America. Wherever he lived and worked he was a commanding personality, eminent in his profession and controlling enormous interests, eminent likewise as a scholar and prolific writer on social subjects, eminent as a teacher and pre-eminent as a social reformer. Comfortable in fortune by reason of his hard-earned income, he yet pitied the outcast and submerged with profound emotion. As speaker, writer and, generally, as agitator and reformer he pleaded their cause in season and out of season. Seventeen years a member here, he was but fifty-eight at death. He may be said to have worn himself out in the service of help to the helpless. Attractive and winning in presence, daring and adroit in conversation, upright and self-sacrificing, he was equally at home in these rooms and in the lodging houses of the east side of New York, a scholar, a patriot, a lover of men.

WILLIAM BISPHAM was of Pennsylvania stock though he came to us from Michigan; he lived to be seventy-one and for twenty-nine years was a Centurion. With a well-trained mind he united the discipline of a soldier, having served during a considerable portion of the Civil War. He was an ardent churchman, long secretary and trustee of Trinity. He was active as member of three learned societies, four charitable organizations and five clubs, in one of which he was president, in another vice-president. A quiet gentleman, an amateur of the arts, especially the drama, a successful merchant, a genial and witty talker, he was a busy, useful man, a sturdy citizen, a power for good and a delightful companion.

JOHN HENRY CASWELL was a mining engineer of ability and an accomplished mineralogist; he was likewise a successful merchant, a generous friend, a lover of books and their makers, a student of ecclesiastical and secular affairs, a devout churchman and charged with weighty church interests. He was a fine type of the best New Yorker. Eminently social, his company was sought by seven clubs, but this was the one he mostly frequented during the twenty-eight years of membership; he was sixty-three when stricken down. He was a graduate of Columbia, for thirty-three years a vestryman of Trinity, for all his manhood a working citizen. Those who survive him here have felt him to be one of the inner circle, a man to trust and love.

Francis Lathrop came of old New England stock though he was born on the Pacific Ocean. His was an almost unique training, for in this city at eleven years of age his intellectual was merged with his aesthetic education; this continued for seven years here, for three in Dresden and for his early manhood in London. Connected in the British capital with Madox Brown, William Morris and Spencer Stanhope, his taste and style were fully developed there. Returning home, he began as mural decorator and a worker in glass. His walls and windows were soon renowned, many famous buildings are resplendent with his work. He was a member of five art associations, and died at sixty having been one of us for seventeen years. A modest man and even shy, he was of engaging personality, his manners expressing trust, unselfishness and sympathy. His friends were many, but he was intimate only with a chosen few.

Theodore Ayrault Dodge was born sixty-seven years ago and, though elected to the Century nine years since, was not frequently here, residing in Paris for long periods during his later years for the sake of the exacting literary work which came in generous measure from his pen. Of New England origin, he was educated in military service at Berlin and had his liberal training in London. Returning to America in 1861, he served nine years under the flag, five as volunteer, participating in the fiercest battles of the Civil War, was several time wounded and finally incapacitated for service by the loss of a limb. He then received a rank in the regular army, served in the War Department and was retired as captain. He was brevetted major and lieutenant colonel.

Colonel Dodge, however, earned a higher rank than any of these, for he was the foremost American writer of military history. He was a master of strategy and tactics, had a lucid mind and a graphic pen. The great captains of the world live again in his pages, and the scenes of their exploits having been visited by the author, no expositor of military science is more accurate or picturesque. The author is as trustworthy in fact and judgment as was the soldier on the field. As for our Civil War his studies and descriptions challenge rivalry.

In both the lands of his domicile he was warmly appreciated for his manliness and sociability, holding a high place in the hearts alike of Americans and foreigners. He was a member of several clubs at home and abroad, the president of one. He was welcome in our circles and esteemed at his full value as soldier, writer and friend.

JOHN STEWART KENNEDY became a member of this Association forty-six years ago, at thirty-three years of age. His gifts to the public during life are averaged by those who know at a hundred thousand dollars for each of his seventy-nine years: his bequests for public purposes were many, many times that sum, half at least of all he possessed. Born in Scotland, trained in the best school of home, church, intellectual and business life, he became an American at twenty-six and started on the career which made him one of that constellation of merchant princes which during three years past have waned in our firmament: great hearts, great gentlemen, great traders, great givers. His fortune was proportionately large, almost from his earliest enterprises, and his gifts began with his prosperity. Scientific in his operations—the sort that open great kingdoms of earth for settlement and cultivation, that better their lot for millions of mankind—he was also scientific in his giving, equally careful in getting and distributing, an instance of "give and it shall be given." It is just as easy to squander in philanthrophy as in self-indulgence: he abhorred both extremes.

He was director, first and last, in a score of mighty business enterprises, he gave equally of his time to reform committees, to hospitals, museums and universities; eight social organizations enjoyed the urbanity of his presence, this one more than others, for he had no higher pleasure than the frequent evenings he spent here. He was an amateur in many directions, especially of books.

Mr. Kennedy's character was strong and positive but his nature was gentle, civility being his marked characteristic. He was a good listener and a terse talker. His convictions were anchored, and he had little concern for novelties of faith or criticism in church, state or society, holding firmly what had stood the test of time and use. He was a devoted Presbyterian, a loyal New Yorker, and a patriotic American, proud of his Scotch origin and connections. The workings of ecclesiastical charity he minutely scrutinized from within and without, and he found them good; in the ecclesiastical sort of education he had little or no interest, preferring the broad and secular type. We have never known a man happier in his home or in his work; and it was this which made him, childless himself, so fatherly to the weak, the suffering, the oppressed. The dangers of charity, as our modern society is constituted, were patent to him; his greatest achievement in the world of philanthropy was the house and staff for the wise organization of our city charity which he made possible. Time and space forbid the enumeration of all his many claims to the gratitude of his own and succeeding generations. The climax of his life is the will, which, after many revisions, eight in all I have heard, he executed for posterity. He founded nothing new and bequeathed his name to no institution. In the main he strengthened the strong, though he discovered many weak that ought to be stronger and made them so. Broadly he selected great corporations which he trusted and gave unconditionally; those to train the mind, to heal the body, to relieve misery and to quicken faith. For art, for missions, and for the spread of civilization he provided amply. His modesty and business sense were as great at the end as at the beginning.

When he came among us it was with the breeziness of the open air which he so loved; angler and yachtsman, with a love of gardens and lawns, he was nature's child, merry and witty. Affairs and men interested him, and in the fullness of life he exulted. But he was never exuberant, always considerate and thoughtful. His life was a triumph of ability controlled by moderation and kindness.

Gabriel Grant had been for fifteen years a frequenter of these rooms, a member of the inner circle. He was born eighty-three years ago in Newark, New Jersey, of earliest colonial stock. Educated at Williams and Columbia, he practised as a physician and organized a hospital in Panama during the close of the gold rush, returned to New York as a cholera expert, was an army surgeon during the Civil War, in charge of important government interests in military hospital work, was on the firing line in a dozen of its fiercest battles, had mention and decoration by Congress for distinguished gallantry and retired only when incapacitated by wounds. His interests were medical, historical and social, and he belonged to six important associations of the city. He will be remembered here as a true friend, an entertaining talker and a delightful companion.

George Fuller had been fifty-two years a member, having been chosen when he was twenty-five. He was one of our two oldest members. His election at an age so young is the sufficient witness of his qualities. He was a merchant, pursuing his business with diligence, but he had refined taste and keen appreciation for what is best in the works of men, their art, their literature, and their science. He lived and walked worthily among his peers. His New Jersey stock was famous, his education sound and never ending, his personality attractive.

GORDON NORRIE was a New Yorker whose father had been a successful merchant and a founder of St. Luke's Hospital. To the interests of an inherited estate, to the family charity, to patronage of the arts, and to usefulness as a citizen the son devoted his life of seventy-two years. He came to us nineteen years ago by right of his cultivated taste, his pleasant manners, and his wide acquaintance among us. His services as treasurer and vice-president of St. Luke's endeared him likewise to the larger world.

RICHARD WATSON GILDER had been a Centurion of the grand manner for nearly thirty years when he laid down his life at sixty-five; a full, strong life which he had offered on the altar of humanity. Men give in different ways; he gave in effort, in sympathy and in song, gave a fortune, a wealth, a personality of qualities partly inherited but largely acquired by the diligence which makes those faithful in few things the rulers over many things. Frail in body and sometimes in health, he feared no struggle, he shrank from no duty, the force was created in the using, and gentleness begat tenderness, which led to conviction and success.

He was proud of his ancestry, the pretensions of simple lives nobly lived where he was born, on the banks of the Delaware in New Jersey. His sire was a preacher, a teacher and a writer. The son learned type-setting from the local printer almost in infancy, and, soon after, the boy was setting the type of his own compositions in the school paper of his father's new school in Long Island; with comrades he wrote and manufactured a campaign newspaper in the interests of Bell and Everett. The Civil War beckoned to both father and son, but higher duty in one case and poor health in the other checked both for a time. But, in the crisis of sixtythree, Richard volunteered and was a soldier so far and so long as to have been under fire. The father enlisted as chaplain and died in a small-pox hospital for soldiers. When mustered out Gilder was attracted toward both law and business, but narrow means turned the choice; he was for a time an employee of the railway, then a reporter and a newspaper editor and at last found rest for the sole of his foot in the office of "Hours at Home," whence he almost immediately graduated into the managing editorship of that magazine which later became The Century, of which for nearly a generation he was editor-in-chief.

Gilder was above all a poet, his nature was melodious, and he marched through life to the rhythm of his own verse. He collected his pieces first in 1875, and what he cared to preserve is in the volume published something more than a year ago. Posterity alone renders the final verdict, but we who knew him find inspiration in his lines. There is the love of man, reverence and trust in the Most High, the beauty of nature, human and material, the charm of relation between the inner and outer worlds, joyously expressed. The special mark of it all is aspiration; while force and wealth could not exalt the state, as he wrote in lines to Lowell: "One great name can make a country great."

Editor and poet, he was also a fearless reformer. The poor of New York may rise to call him blessed, for, thanks to his efforts, their homes can never again be the stews they were before he marshalled the hosts of reform. To his commission our crowded quarters owe their parks, and by it careless landlords were forced to supply the water in tenement halls, which is an aid to cleaner living. Any menace to the city's beauty aroused a scorn which dipped his pen in vitriol; any possibility of adding to its charm found in him an unwearied supporter. The mental and moral safety of little children, the civil service reform, the safeguarding of literary property: there was not a struggle for righteousness in which he did not deliver strokes of his battle axe. But his crowning glory is the insight with which he discovered ability and encouraged the rising craftsman of the author's guild. Those who are wielding the pen in a coming generation will rise to call him blessed.

We miss him here; other like bodies enjoyed his presence, but here he gave his whole self. Others wondered sometimes, we understood always. To the gatherings here he turned, when weary, for refreshment; when wavering, for advice, and, when discouraged, for the sympathy which gave him new vigor. If anywhere his example and memory can serve as inspiration, it is to those who survive him here.

JOHN CALDWELL was born seventy years ago in a remote hamlet of Western Ireland and was literally educated on the Bible and Paradise Lost, with the little assistance his hardworking clergyman father could afford. He migrated to America, and two years later enlisted under Lincoln's first call for volunteers, continuing in the service until mustered out as captain at the end of the war. He saw the fiercest fighting and was once captured, but only to be rescued by Sheridan. A Pittsburgher by adoption he entered on the career of its great industry, but though successful he neglected to grow rich, preferring the collection of books and pictures and the cultivation of his mind as a student of art for which he had innate talent. Rising steadily in the esteem of his fellows, he held the highest trusts of every sort, and was at least as influential as any other in the upbuilding of Pittsburgh's great galleries and educational institutions. He will be remembered as kindly, helpful and ever active for broadening and strengthening the aesthetic life of his community. He possessed one of the best collections of Whistler's etchings, a folio of Shakespeare, and many priceless incunabula, but his treasures were for others' use and inspiration even more than for his own.

CHARLES STEWART SMITH was a Centurion of long standing, having been for forty-three of his seventy-seven years a member of the association. Of old and famous New England ancestry he brought to New York the capital of integrity and ability, and with it rose to eminence as a merchant. To the affairs of his adopted city he gave untiring, unselfish attention, leading successful campaigns for civic righteousness. Our underground transit we owe in large measure to his efforts. Five financial corporations, two great charities and our two foremost art institutions had the benefit of his interest and active participation. He was for a time president of the Chamber of Commerce, was a member of five social and two patriotic organizations. His avocation was art and letters; a notable collection of oriental porcelains he gave to the Metropolitan, and his home was full of important paintings by native and foreign artists. For the betterment of social conditions in every quarter of the city he was active and very liberal. He was one of the great merchants of a time when New York's commercial greatness was in the building, when the metropolis was in the making, and when sturdy, honest, capable men put their shoulders to the wheels of progress, when each felt the others' interest to be his own and the welfare of the whole community a charge for which he was responsible. He was constant in his attendance at our meetings and found hearty greetings on every hand.

WILLIAM METCALF was a child of Pittsburgh, a graduate of the Troy Polytechnic, and a master in the steel industry all his days; a, and perhaps the, great expert in his field, a writer of authority. His earliest efforts were in a foundry where the big guns were cast, which in the Civil War made our heavy ordnance, afloat and ashore, the finest and most efficient in the world. Organizing successive companies for specialties in iron and steel working, he steadily rose to eminence in the community. His growing wealth he devoted to the welfare of his city in public institutions, especially the hospital of which he was president. Eminent likewise as an engineer he enjoyed the honors of high office in societies of that profession; he was foremost in settling some of the weightiest problems of inland navigation. Staunch in maintenance of church and state he was a sturdy upholder of the social order. When here the charm of his mind and person, the force of his character and knowledge, gave to him and his friends the feeling that he was at home.

Horace See was a Philadelphian by birth and though he lived long in this city his connections with Pennsylvania remained close and constant. He had a sound school education and the training of the shop. Rising to ever higher tasks by reason of his strong mind and inventive genius, he became a marine engineer and naval architect of high renown. He was a member of nine technical societies, holding important office in some, and of two social organizations. He had been twelve years an associate of ours when he died at seventy-seven. A man quite out of the common, a product of practical life, strong in mind, quick in discernment, he was an ornament of his profession.

George Park Fisher was a scholar of the highest order, a theologian, philosopher and historian. He was born in Massachusetts, educated at Brown University, Andover Seminary, and in Germany, but he lived his long life of distinguished service as a professor at Yale. He was already seventy years old when elected to our membership in 1897, and, delighting in its privileges, it was only in his latest years that his presence became unfamiliar to us. He was gathered to his fathers, full of years and of honors at eighty-two.

His academic life was a continuous growth to its close; beginning with the struggles of a college pastor for undergraduate righteousness, it passed into the phase of a professorship in divinity, and closed in the triumphs of a great reform accomplished by many associates but with his efficient aid. The religious radicals of his time, an era of upheaval and readjustment, found little sympathy in him, as likewise did the ultra-conservative dogmatists. But he was ardent for progress along the line of traditional change, and he saw his preferred method prevail in the end.

He was a voluminous writer; sixteen books and several score of articles or pamphlets bear his name.

Some of his volumes are critical and discursive, but in the main they are historical, and the solid basis of his fame is in his lucid work as a secular historian. For this he was honored by the presidency of the American Historical Association. For his work as a theologian he was honored by degrees from great universities at home and abroad.

From his college days he was a careful student of contemporary politics; the great issues of his own day he thoroughly understood, and his influence was everywhere felt among the wide circle of his important acquaintance. Eager and curious, judicious and fearless, his mind was not only active but stimulating. Learned, witty, wise and polished, his capacious and retentive memory gave him a store of instance and anecdote which was phenomenal. In his person, therefore, he had the charm of that companionship which so subtly flatters the other man by keeping both at their best. In all the finer relations of life he was so genuine and tender that even here the mention of the fact suffices.

Walter Shirlaw was a Scot by birth and in his artistic tradition continued loyal to his native land, preferring genre of a somewhat Scottish type for his most serious work. But he arrived in America during early childhood, spent sixty-nine of his seventy-one years on these shores and, by education, temperament and enthusiasm, was a representative American painter; he was a man of renown as decorator, illustrator and teacher in his much loved profession. At his best he was an artist of very high rank, exhibiting a creative imagination and strong, broad, finished technique. During twenty-four years he came and went among us, greatly beloved and cherished by the inner circle of his friends.

CHARLES HENRY LUDINGTON was born in this state, in a nearby county, and educated in a Connecticut school. He came early to this city and founded a mercantile house which finally became one of the foremost in its line. Retiring over forty years ago, he continued in the direction of many corporations until taken off at seventy-one years of age, having been associated with us for forty-five. Throughout the Civil War he was an ardent patriot, a founder of the Union League, and busy in the raising and equipping of regiments. Besides membership in two social clubs he was an active supporter of three art associations, in all of which he took the keenest interest. His long period of comparative leisure was really one of activity in the things that make for spiritual and intellectual progress. To the manner of The Century he was distinctly native, and in it he had warm, stimulating friendships.

DARIUS OGDEN MILLS was eighty-four years of age and had belonged to this society for twenty-two. His birthplace was in this state, and he had his school education at His family was of early American origin, and he possessed the qualities of his race. He entered young on business life in this city and, after a thorough training, removed to Buffalo, where he was in the service of a bank Thus far his life was perhaps commonplace, as cashier. though the thoughts he entertained were not. The discovery of gold in California gave him his opportunity, and thenceforward as trader, as banker, as traveller, as prospector and promoter he lived on the grand scale, a man to be ranked among the builders of the nation on the Pacific coast. Though he retained all his important business interests in the West, and lived for portions of the year on the other slope of the continent, yet affairs of the first magnitude demand residence at the financial center, and he became a New Yorker in home and in spirit. To California he has given liberally in time as trustee of important interests and in money as a benefactor of education. He was here a director of twenty-three corporations, of four social clubs and of four learned societies, being a trustee of our two great museums and of the Carnegie Institution, president of the Botanical Garden, and a liberal supporter of two hospitals. The burden of all these responsibilities he bore conscientiously yet with ease, so fine was the system of his life, so smooth the working of his powers.

He is well known among us not only as a financial giant, and not alone as a patron of the fine arts, nor alone as a generous benefactor of approved charities. The most original of his philanthropic devices, as it has been one of the most successful, was the establishment successively of three great hostelries for those not able to secure even a middle standard of living. These great institutions are the result of careful study, extensive travel, business shrewdness and the firm conviction that every man has good in him, any bad propensity being minimized by wholesome environment. The result justified the outlay of money, time and devotion. The money paid by guests affords a return on the investment, there is no relation of patron to client, the world is better for the existence of his hostelries.

The personality of Mr. Mills was familiar to all New Yorkers as he walked the streets, or stood at his window interested in the panorama of life as it rolled by. He was genial, affable, and refused himself to no respectable caller. In the circles of this association, and indeed in the best society of every sort, he was ever welcome for he combined sympathy and tact with force and insight. Through much and interesting experience of life he long since became a commanding figure in the best work of the country.

George Earl Church was elected to our membership less than two years ago, when he was already seventy-two. He was born in Massachusetts, educated in Rhode Island, of which state his ancestors were earliest settlers, and by extensive travel, being an engineer by vocation and an explorer by avocation. He was on the upper Amazon almost in boyhood, served as volunteer throughout the Civil War and in Mexico, retiring as colonel and brevet brigadier; was a war correspondent and journalist, and then, partly as engineer, partly as explorer, and sometimes as diplomate, he spent the rest of his active life in Central and South America. He was a collector of books also, gathering a professional and scientific library vying in size with many public collections. He was a voluminous writer of specialized monographs, and conducted engineering works of great magnitude. Such a man, widely travelled, well-informed, naturally genial, could not fail to have many friends, as he did, on both sides of the Atlantic. He was a member of four clubs and of several learned societies, being president of one, and was in general sympathetic with the highest activities of men.

WILLIAM ROGERS RICHARDS was born in Boston, educated at Yale and Andover, was a clergyman first in Maine, then in New Jersey and finally in New York, where he fell like a soldier suddenly stricken on the field of battle. For no man was more thoroughly enlisted for his warfare than he was, and no man threw himself more entirely into the conflict, and no man, conscious of the right, was less indifferent to the consequences. Throughout his ministry he was a keen combatant in the pulpit, a scholar thoroughly versed in the polemics, social and theological, of his age, and a just man, ever ready to hear, and fearless to present the other side to prejudiced audiences. Men heard him gladly, however poignant their disagreement, because of his blameless life, his fine character, and especially of the work he was doing so untiringly for the regeneration of man on earth as well as beyond. In the faith committed to him by his Puritan fathers he never wavered, but he was ever ready to modify and adapt it to new conditions. walked serene and confident amid the strife and babble of tongues, managing a great institutional church, a councillor in the affairs of the New York University and of Yale, carrying welcome messages to many colleges, a profound student of education in its bearing on character, a man of God in the world but not of it. For six years he had enjoyed, thoroughly enjoyed and cultivated, this fellowship, being regular in attendance here and keen in his appreciation of his Century friendships. He was but fifty-seven when he fell exhausted, suddenly and without warning, a sacrifice on the altar of the high duty he struggled so manfully and so successfully to perform.

The stroke of the reaper in the standing corn of The Century has this year been broad and deep, but the grain was ripe for the harvest. Though our memorial list be longer or shorter, it is ever like a behest of honor to the coming generation that it emulate its predecessors in virtue, in honor, in devotion.

Secretary.

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

Passed March 7th, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section I. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble, and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the City of New York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of Art and Literature, by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room, and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

SEC. 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a Constitution and By-Laws, Rules and Regulations, for the admission, government, suspension and expulsion of its members, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds; and from time to time to alter or repeal such Constitution, By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this Act shall constitute the Trustees and Managers until others are elected in their places.

- SEC. 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real or personal estate, provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.
- SEC. 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.
- SEC. 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this Act.
  - Sec. 6. This Act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the General Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

CONSTITUTION

THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I.

This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II.

Section I. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

SEC. 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The first Vice-President, or in his absence the second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence, or during a vacancy in his office.

SEC. 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

SEC. 4. The Treasurer shall collect, and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at every annual meeting, and oftener, if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the Board of Management shall have the power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem. to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled. [Adopted December 5th, 1903.]

SEC. 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III.

OF THE POWERS OF THE ASSOCIATION AT ITS GENERAL MEETINGS.

Section 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

SEC. 2. No resolution making any disposition by way of sale, lease, or mortgage, of any of the property of the Association, or whereby an expenditure of more than two hundred and fifty dollars is or may be incurred, shall be passed except at a meeting at which sixty members shall be present, and two-thirds of those present shall vote in favor thereof, nor until the resolution shall have been referred to and considered by the Board of Management, and they shall have reported their opinion thereon, which report shall be made at the monthly meeting next after the reference.

ARTICLE IV

OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

Section I. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

- SEC. 2. The Board shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from November to June inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum. [Amended December 5th, 1908.]
- SEC. 3. The Board of Management shall exercise the right, at their discretion, of inviting strangers, distinguished in literature or the fine arts, who may visit the city, to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay.
- SEC. 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper.

ARTICLE V.

OF COMMITTEES AND THEIR DUTIES.

Section I. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No members of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 2. OTHER COMMITTEES. There shall be a House Committee, a Committee on Literature, and a Committee on Art, each composed of three members; and such Committees shall be chosen by the Board of Management from its own members within two weeks after each annual meeting. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws.

ARTICLE VI.

OF THE MEMBERS

Section 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand.

SEC. 2. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months, shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer

Absentees shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of resident members. In case the return of absentees shall increase the number above the limit prescribed, no new resident members shall be chosen until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit.

SEC. 3. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding three hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from the New York City Hall, and having no office nor place of business in New York.

All officers of the Army and Navy, who are now members, or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during the tenure of their commissions. [Adopted Nov. 4th, 1899; and Oct. 6th, 1900.

SEC. 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms, at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative, and such negative votes to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude from membership the person against whom they are cast.

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

SEC. 5. Non-resident members may, at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February, 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

- SEC. 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.
- SEC. 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member. Such payments shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of the election, and in default of such payment the member shall be deemed to have declined his election.
- SEC. 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be sixty dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be thirty dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter.

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election. [First two paragraphs adopted October 7th, 1899.]

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member elected to the non-resident class shall come to reside within the radius before named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fee necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member.

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address. [Adopted April 1st, 1899.]

SEC. 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by unanimous vote by ballot. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office.

SEC. 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association. [Adopted May 7th, 1898.]

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

SEC. 11. No card playing shall be allowed in the rooms of the Association, and betting of any kind is strictly prohibited.

ARTICLE VII.

OF MEETINGS.

SECTION I. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association, for the election of officers and other business. It shall be held on the second Saturday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock p. m. [Amended March 3d, 1900.]

SEC. 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association, for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Saturday of each month (except January, July, August, September, and October), at 9 o'clock p. m. [Amended December 5th, 1908.]

SEC. 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

SEC. 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII.

OF AMENDMENTS, ETC.

SECTION I. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

- SEC. 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.
- SEC. 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting: provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS.

Section I. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

SEC. 2. On the first day of each month, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall, and such members shall be refused further credit until their indebtedness is discharged.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him thereof, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member. [Last two paragraphs adopted April, 1895.]

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

- SEC. 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms, in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.
- SEC. 4. Any member may personally introduce visitors to the rooms of the Association as provided in this Section, but not otherwise.

The name and address of each visitor, together with the personal signature of the member introducing him, shall be entered in a book to be kept for that purpose, immediately upon the introduction of such visitor into the building, and such visitor shall not be admitted to any part of the House, except the reception room on the first floor, until such entry has been made.

No member shall introduce more than one visitor on the same day.

No person who has been introduced as a visitor under the provisions of this Section shall be introduced again by the same member during the same calendar year, except upon a card first obtained from the House Committee. A list containing the names and addresses of all persons to whom such cards are issued, and the names of the members requesting the same, shall be kept by the House Committee; and no card shall be issued to any visitor until at least one month has elapsed since his last introduction.

At monthly or annual meetings no visitor shall be introduced, unless he is first provided with a card of admission, obtained from the House Committee, and signed by a member of the Association, and no one residing in the City of New York, or within twenty-five miles thereof, shall be admitted to any such meeting oftener than once in any calendar year, except by the consent of the Board of Management. The House Committee shall keep a list of all such cards issued, similar to that provided for in the preceding subdivision; and not more than one card shall be issued to the same member for any one meeting.

In case of violation of any of the provisions of this Section the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein, with regard to any member or visitor, for a period not exceeding ten days; and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such periods as, in their discretion, the interests of the Association may require. In cases of suspension, notice in writing signed by the Secretary of the House Committee, or the Secretary of the Board of Management, shall be mailed to each person affected thereby at his last known address; and such suspension shall take effect from the time of such mailing.

It shall be the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this Section, and promptly to report to the Board of Management for its action all cases of persistent violation thereof.

On the four days following a monthly meeting, between the hours of twelve, noon, and four in the afternoon, visitors may be admitted to the picture gallery only, on presenting a card signed by a member.

A list containing the names and addresses of all persons holding cards entitling them to partake of the privileges of the Association for a longer period than one day, with the dates of the issuance and expiration of such cards, shall be kept posted by the House Committee in the rooms of the Association, and shall be corrected from day to day, as changes occur. [Section 4 was adopted February 5th, 1898.]

- SEC. 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, and keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors.
- SEC. 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, periodicals, and newspapers.
- SEC. 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms.

- SEC. 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.
- SEC. 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.
- SEC. 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

Added to the By-Laws April 4th, 1891.

Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Saturday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

RULES

FOR THE

ADMISSION OF NON-RESIDENT VISITORS

ADOPTED BY THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT, OCT. 31, 1907

Cards admitting non-resident visitors to the privileges of the Club-house for more than one day may be issued under the following rules.

The name and residence of the proposed guest must be stated in the written application. A card may be issued after such application by the House Committee or any member thereof.

No card for longer than one month shall be issued.

Only one card can be issued at the request of any member during the same period of time.

The same guest cannot be granted a second card during that calendar year.

Cards can be issued only to persons residing more than fifty miles from City Hall.

Cards must not be issued or signed in blank.

The member at whose request a card is issued shall be responsible for the guest's indebtedness to the Association.

Any or all cards may be revoked at any time by the House Committee.

A book must be kept, open to the inspection of the members, in which shall be entered the name and residence, of the guest, the period covered by his card, the name of the member requesting the same, and the initials of the member of the Committee signing the card.

The Board of Management only has the power to extend the time or to grant a second card during the same calendar year, or to make other modifications in these rules to meet special cases.

HOUSE RULES

VI.

The lights throughout the house shall be extinguished at two a. m.

RULES

COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

ADOPTED BY THE ASSOCIATION DECEMBER 2D, 1893

I.

The name, residence, and profession or occupation of every candidate for membership in this Association shall be entered in a special book kept for this purpose; such entry shall be accompanied by the signatures of the proposer and seconder. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry upon written authorization by the proposer and seconder. When such entry is properly completed, the Secretary shall add the candidate's name to the posted list, with date corresponding to the date of the completed entry.

II.

The proposer of a candidate shall send promptly a letter of recommendation to the Secretary of the Committee on Admissions, giving the name, place of residence, and profession or occupation of the candidate, with such statement of his qualifications as the proposer may deem proper. The seconder shall likewise send a letter of recommendation.

III.

If it shall appear that no letters have been received from the proposer and seconder of any candidate, when his name is called up for consideration at a meeting of the Committee, the name shall be passed; and the Secretary shall immediately notify the proposer and seconder that, unless the required letters are received before the next following meeting, the candidate shall be deemed withdrawn, and his name dropped from the list.
